ABOUT HEDGE FUNDS

Hedge funds are investment funds that pool capital from accredited individuals or institutional investors and employ various strategies to generate returns for their investors. These funds typically have more flexibility than traditional investment vehicles like mutual funds, allowing them to invest in a wider range of assets and use more sophisticated techniques, such as short selling, leverage, derivatives, and arbitrage.

OUR TRADE STRATEGIES

- Long/Short Equity: This strategy involves taking both long (buy) and short (sell) positions in stocks, aiming to profit from both rising and falling prices
- Event-Driven: Event-driven strategies aim to profit from corporate events such as mergers, acquisitions, bankruptcies, and restructurings.
- Quantitative: Quantitative hedge funds use mathematical models and algorithms to identify and execute trades.
- Credit Strategies: Credit hedge funds focus on investing in various forms of credit instruments, such as corporate bonds, loans, and structured credit products.
